MAD LIBS

Detective _____ (your name) walked down a _____ (adjective) alley. He was going to catch the notorious Slime, known throughout the city for his _____ (crime plural). Then, the Detective heard _____ (sound) behind him. It was coming from his sidekick, the _____ (adjective) _____ (noun).

"Shhhhh!" the Detective told his sidekick _____ (-ly adjective).

"Sorry, I was just _____ (-ing activity)."

 Replied the sidekick. They continued to _____ (verb) down the alleyway until they came to a door. The door was _____ (adjective) and _____ (adjective). As the sidekick _____ (verb) in fear, the Detective bravely stretched out his _____ (part of the body) and opened the door. Inside, the _____ (color) floor was littered with _____ (type of trash). Although it seemed like the perfect villain hideout, the Detective knew he had the wrong place. How? The notorious Slime was a neat freak. He _____ (-ed verb) out of the room and into a _____ (type of room). Here, the _____ (feature of room) sparkled and the _____ (feature of room) gleamed.

"Don't touch anything." The Detective told his sidekick. In response, the sidekick picked up a _____ (noun) and said,

"Look at this!" Immediately, the Slime jumped out from behind a _____ (piece of furniture) and whipped out his net. He captured the _____ (adjective) Detective and his _____ (adjective) sidekick. And so, this story ends with a pivotal lesson.

Sometimes, the enemy wins, but only if you have an idiot for a sidekick.

FROM THE STAFF

Dear Readers,

This year's yearbook is a little different from past years. We decided on a mystery novel theme. Because this is still a yearbook, we couldn't completely make it a novel. Instead, you will find 'chapters' written out on class pages that feature a crime committed within the school. There are 5 chapters in the high school, and 3 chapters in the elementary. After the chapters, there will be a 'Who Dunit' page explaining the culprit and his/her motive.

Disclaimer:

Any similarities between characters and real life people is completely coincidental and does not reflect the beliefs or thoughts of the Ellendale Journalism Class.

Thank you,

2016 Ellendale Journalism

CAST OF CHARACTERS

Here is a list of characters played by people who (see disclaimer) may have striking similarities to real life people, but this is just a coincidence.

Detectives: Seniors (Although all seniors are detectives, it is classified which ones worked and which ones sat and ate donuts!)

Suspects: Teachers and Administration (by process of elimination, because only the teachers and administration would stand to gain from this heinous crime)

Innocent Bystanders: You know who you are.

Culprit: ??? (in all reality, it's for us to know, and you to find out)

Chapter 1

Update: An investigation is underway to discover who stole the Cardinal. The investigative team, known throughout the high school as the 'seniors', have no leads at this point. However, one witness who has chosen to remain anonymous, has come forward with a statement. "I was there when the carriers went inside. We all expected them to come out with a Cardinal, but then they just..didn't. It was heartbreaking." The carriers have been unavailable for questioning at this point.

Chapter 2

Update: The seniors have found a lead! At the scene of the crime, there was a single red feather found which is believed to belong to the missing Cardinal costume. While it is somewhat expected that the costume will shed a feather from time to time because its age, a hair was found on the feather. The seniors thought it might just be a thread or a piece of dust, but after further inspection they have confirmed it is a black hair about one inch in length. This eliminates all suspects with blonde hair, but the seniors admit it might be dark brown, so they are cautious about dismissing any more suspects at this time.

Chapter 3

Update: The seniors are now interviewing all suspects that fit the profile of the hair. For efficiency, they have enlisted the help of Mr. Herman, the high school principal, and Mr. Fastnacht, the school superintendent. During questioning, one student, who remains anonymous, said as follows: "I was coming out of the locker room from practice yesterday and I thought I saw a glimpse of red feathers in the coaches' office. I tried to get a closer look, but the door was locked, and I couldn't see anything else." The seniors have begun theorizing as to what this means. They have released from questioning all students who aren't enrolled in any sports, as they believe those students wouldn't have stored the mascot in the coaches' office. They have called into questioning all sports coaches, including those coaches who are out of season.

Chapter 4

Update: All coaches have been questioned and released. Mr. Vance, the head boys' basketball coach, was the main suspect, but had an alibi that checked out as he was already on his way to Oakes for the game. The seniors are stumped as to what to do next, so they asked their consultants on the case, Mr. Herman, and Mr. Fastnacht. They put their heads together and came up with a solution: to inspect the coaches' office and try to find clues. Tune in next time for their results.

Chapter 5

Update: The inspection of the coaches office turned up some very interesting evidence. Mr. Herman and Mr. Fastnacht insisted on being there to help with the search. Things were looking dull, until, right as the team was going to exit, a senior pulled a pen and a crinkled, ink-stained cardinal leather out of Mr. Herman's pocket. They think that he found it during the search of the coaches' office, and stole it to cover up his theft. Although Mr. Herman's involvement has evidence, and the venue for the stashed mascot makes sense, the seniors still need to establish motive before officially convicting him. Tune in for the next episode on page 23.

EPILOGUE

A note from the lead detective:

I walked towards the makeshift interrogation room feeling entitled. I'd been chosen out of 23 seniors to be the one to interrogate the prime suspect. As I waked toward the interrogation room, I imagined I was a fearsome detective on CSI, and this was just another day. I approached the door, closer, closer, until I was nose-to-nose with the crisscrossed glass. My hand touched the brushed metal handle and I took a deep breath as I stepped inside.

Inside, the fluorescent lights washed the room in a sterile white light and the table, that usually functioned as a ticket booth at sports games, was set up exactly in the center. Two chairs were stationed on either side, and one was set cockeyed and held the form of the suspect. I sat down in the chair opposite the suspect and stared at him for two whole seconds before looking away. I was about to interrogate Mr. Herman and I didn't know if I could do it.

"Um, where were you, uh, at the time of the crime?" my voice tumbled out shaky and timid, words tripping over each other. Not at all what I'd planned.

"I was in my office. Working." Mr. Herman spoke in gruff, short tones.

"What were you working on?" I asked, gaining confidence.

"Principal things." Mr. Herman really wasn't giving me anything to work with.

"Okay, Mr. Herman, I'm going to have to ask you to be more specific. What were you working on, exactly?" My impatience worked in my favor as it gave my voice a confident edge. To my surprise, Mr. Herman's rigid stance broke, and he breathed out a sigh.

"I was working with Mr. Fastnacht. We were both a little sad that we didn't get to graduate from Ellendale High School and we just wanted to know what it was like to grow up a Cardinal. So ... we stole the Cardinal. We were always going to return it though."

I gasped. I had just gotten my first full confession out of a suspect. I might have to change my major, I thought to myself. As I jotted down the confession, word for word, I thanked Mr. Herman and assured him, he would be rewarded for his confession. As I walked out of the interrogation room, I looked towards the rest of the senior detectives and gave them a little nod assuring them the crime had been solved. Immediately, the celebration began as I heard whoops and received several pats on the back.

The mystery was solved.

THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL MYSTERY

Day 1: Houston, we have a problem. Someone is stealing the elementary's snacks! Teachers from every grade have reported snacks missing, and not just a couple...all of them! The sixth graders will be launching the investigation, and so far they haven't found a lead, but they have organized a team. This team (members classified) has started by going back to the scene of the crime. Here is what they found.

"Upon arriving, we found trails of carrots and jicama leading from the snack storage area and then out of the cafeteria entirely. The trail ends right outside the cafeteria doors, as if the culprit had realized his mistake. We will continue looking for clues, but from here on out, everyone's a suspect."

Day 2: The sixth graders have continued their investigation by talking to everyone who came in contact with the snacks before they were stolen. They have talked to the lunch ladies, the janitors, and all teachers who went behind the lunch counter that day. They report that all the stories have checked out so far, but they will remain vigilant.

"The janitors gave us their account of what happened when they brought the snacks in, and our team has determined that everything is normal there. We have also talked to the lunch ladies, and although one admitted to eating a couple of jicama sticks before sorting them into bowls for the students, no one stole the snacks."

Day 3: The crime is solved! One of the sixth graders was doing some overnight work, and during his/her shift (members of the investigative team are classified) and they caught the culprit disposing of all the empty cups that used to hold the stolen snacks! Here is a quote from the detective who caught the thief.

"I was just crouching in a corner, watching the hallway for any suspicious activity, when I saw the culprit creeping sneakily, holding a big garbage bag full of the evidence of his crime. I immediately stopped him and questioned him, where he admitted to the whole thing. The next day I got cupcakes from each of my classmates, so I think that was my favorite part of catching him."

Who do you think the culprit is? Figure it out by subtracting two from each of the code numbers and filling in the correct letter.

6TH GRADE

As the big kids in the elementary, the 6th graders work hard to prepare themselves for 7th grade. Never fear though, they still find plenty of time to be silly and have fun!
